

I don't believe that the FCC should implement any proposal that would lessen the effect of our current laws. Telephone Privacy is certainly an important issue for the FCC, however, where state laws are effective and currently in place, no FCC regulations should preempt the state law. Such is the case in Indiana. Since I have added my family's number, my parents' number and my in-laws' number to the list, all of us have noticed a drastic decrease in the number of unwanted calls. Indiana has been successful in its implementation of privacy laws and lesser standards would not be acceptable here.
